Twine is an open-source, auto-scaling WebSocket service that provides connection state recovery and is intended for developers seeking to add real-time functionality to their existing applications.

- Design and implemented logic governing connection state recovery using token authentication
- Enabled long-term state recovery by implementing a long-term storage solution (AWS DynamoDB)
- Improved long-term state recovery by engineering a more performant database query (DynamoDB)
- Resolved synchronization issues when scaling Twine by implementing Redis Adaptor logic (Redis)
- Facilitated communication between the developer's application and Twine by writing client and server-side libraries that manage WebSocket connections and the publish-subscribe messaging mechanism Twine employs (Socket.IO, Node.js, TypeScript)
- Collaborated remotely with an international team of four engineers across three time zones, employing agile methodologies and practices such as sprints, code reviews, and pair programming
- Co-authored a technical case study providing an in-depth analysis of Twine's problem domain, system design, and engineering decisions (<https://twine-realtime.github.io/case-study> 🔗)
